Temple of the Master ZONTAR - Dobbstown

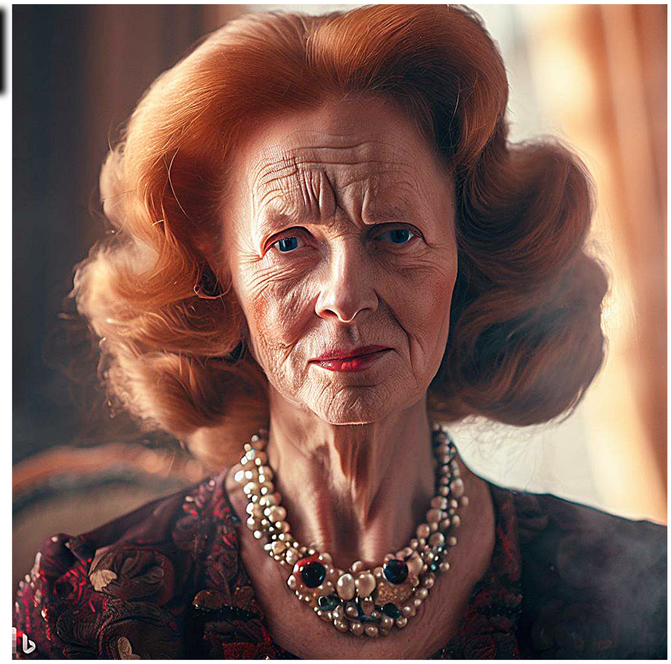

Compleated model kit from Lil' Mutant Inc 1959

The Depression years were a time when the last forgotten corners of the world were revealing their final secrets to a public hungry for distracting adventures.
From Hoboken to Cucamonga the American public trilled to the exploits of the colorful conquerors of the unknown.

Many a mountebank and charlatan prospered in those troubled times providing diverting experiences to the huddled masses.
Lurid Pulp Magazines proliferated providing the armchair adventures thrilling dreams in the safety of their domestic domiciles.

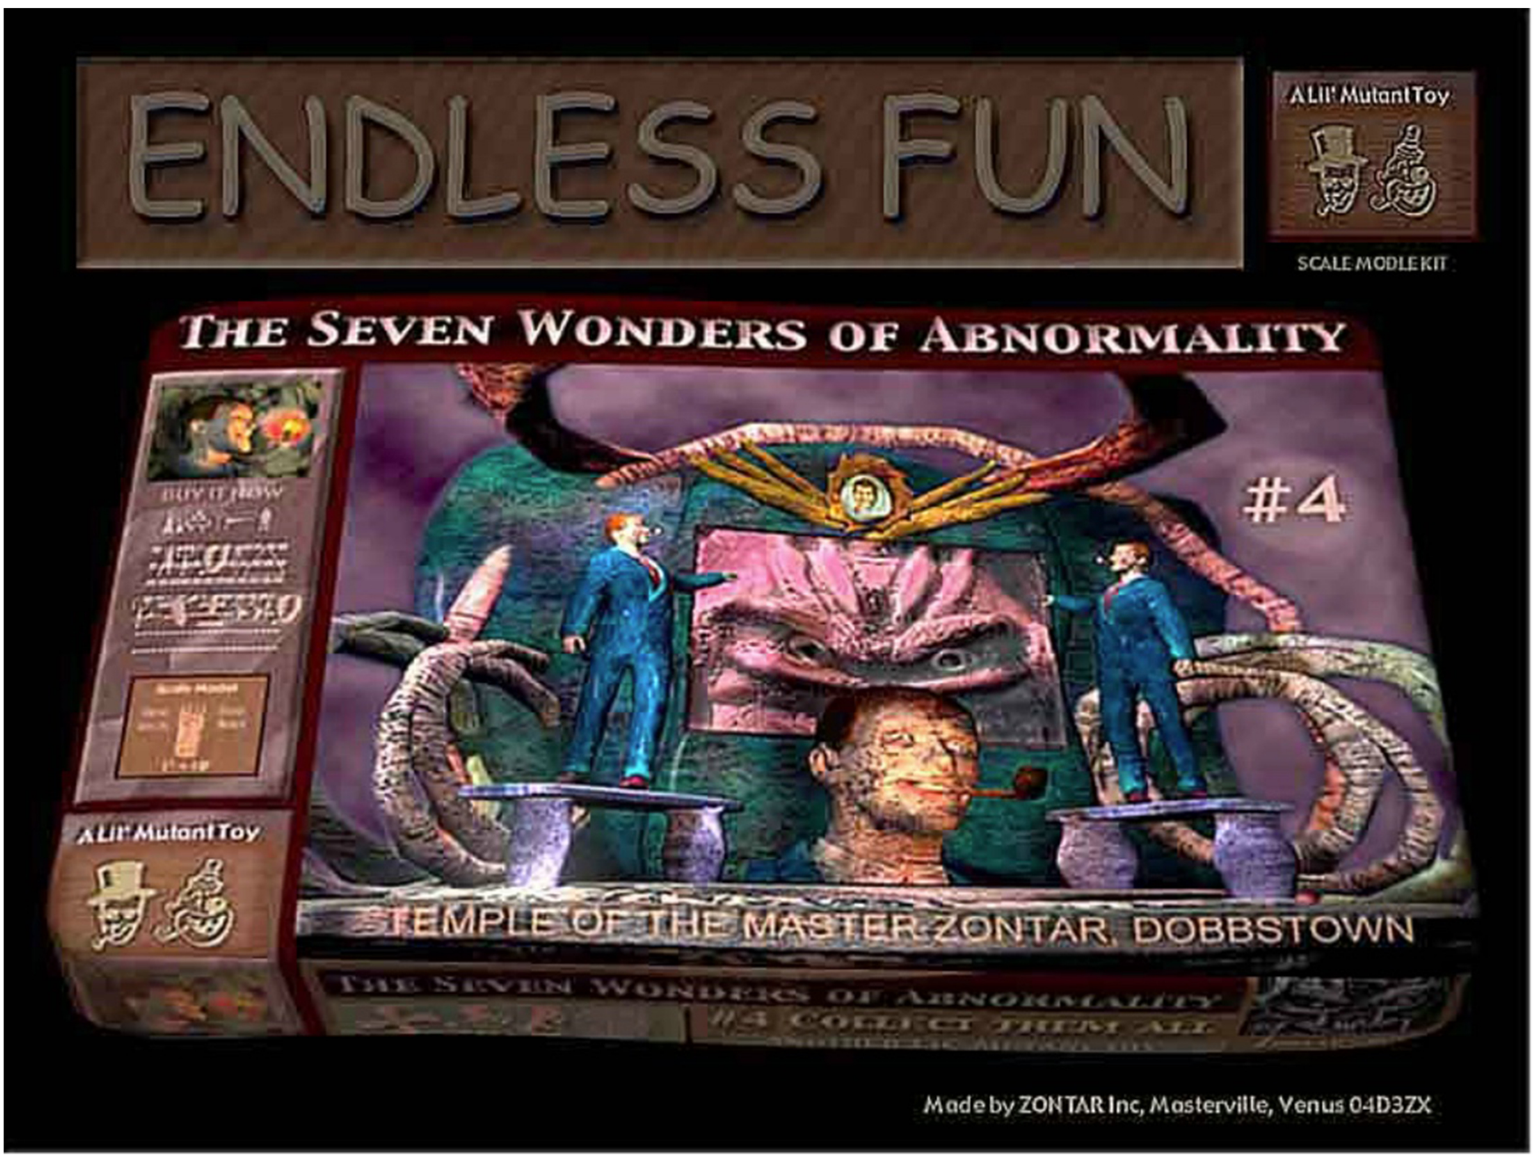

Lady Elmena Trustfunder was one of the few women reluctantly admitted to the exclusive enclave of the inner circle of the privileged few. However certain parties conspired to both keep her from any promising territories and media connections. The success of this endeavor has erased most records of this intriguing person.

Many now revealed facts point to the thesis that it was she and the fine females of "The Pink Ladies" of the Socialist Social Society who uncovered the ultimate mysteries of the forgotten temple complex.

Ad for model kit from Lil' Mutant catalog 1959

Reggie Wombathyde rode the crest of the fad.

Though many of his alleged discoveries were later debunked, Reggie and his hand-tooled leather auto-gyro cut a dashing swath across the American imagination. The Republic serial "Rat Men from the Lost City" based on his boisterous bogus story, was the most popular chapter drama of its era. For a time he served as narrator on a lack luster radio drama based on his 'Auto-Gyros Cross the Tundra'.

The jungle had long encroached upon the temple in the abandoned sectors of old Dobbstown when it was rediscovered by Sir Cromfoot (Reggie) Wombathyde. Reggie was awarded the coveted Leather Gyro award at the posh Interocitor and Auto-Gyro Gentleman's Club for his triumphant achievement

From the years of neglect.

Rare clipping from the Intrepid Explorers column, Auto-gyro Gentleman's Quarterly, winter 1933

In the 1930's The Interocitor and Auto-Gyro Gentleman's Club was under the control of the "Scrambled Egg Heads", an eccentric collection of brilliant tinkerers and Intergalactic Bankers.

These fellows knew a opportunity when it came their way and the colorful Reggie was more than willing to be the center of any preposterous pulp melodrama this creative crew concocted.
Reggie knew that these were the people that would best exploit the mysteries of
The Temple. Soon the powerful Z-Rays were supercharging the hotrod Interocitors
The magnificent Old Dobbstown Historic District was restored to its current glory at this time.

The preposterous ploy of Patrick Pugnacious

Patrick Pugnacious who was the Autogyro Wangler on the Wombathyde expeditions was a colorful charlatan who sold his life story to the sleazy pulp magazine “Spicy Tropical interludes”. His account of the rediscovery of the fabled Temple has become the accepted history regardless of its veracity.

“Well, th' gyros was purrin’ away prettily that hot equatorial afternoon. Th' wind was turnin' th' arboreal canopies below into a writhin' sea of green.

Now, Me and Reggie had acquired an ancient map of Old Dobbstown from a Sham Shaman under suspicious circumstances. We was fixin’ to find th' fabled treasure of th’ Temple. We had just about given up what little hope we had left after several faltering and failed attempts when I spotted a reddish glow in the verdant primeval overgrowth. We put down in a natural clearin' and set off on foot. We was 47 clicks North East of New Dobbstown in the vast area of Old Dobbstown that had been abandoned in The Troubles of 353 BCE. Th’ vegetation was unique to this district. The legends say the th’ Temple emits high frequency Z-Rays causin' th’ fauna to develop in myriad monstrous mutations.“

“Th’ machete Gang cut a swarth through th’ monumental dreamscape. Soon our intrepid crew found themselves at th’ base of a wall of crimson marble inlayed with figures of th’ finest cubic zirconia. Th’ hieroglyphs were in Bobco, th’ puzzling pictograms of th’ old city.
Professor Pretentious translated the ominous warning:
“Abandoned all cash all ye who enter here.”
Just beyond was found a gateway to th’ inner temple. Reggie was th’ first to make his way to what is now known as th’ Room of Wonders.
Festooned upon the walls was a complex of relief sculptures visually documenting the convoluted contracts and cooperations conceived between “Bob” Dobbs and Zontar.”

“But ya know its never all milk n’ honey. Them pesky Z-rays in th’ passing millennia had transformed the local Orangutang tribes into twisted Monkey Men known as Magaloids. These simple sub-hu-mans were emotional entities easily led by th’ most abhorrent among them. Before we knowed it the chamber was awash with th’ simian simpletons. Reggie managed to let loose a volley of leaden death into the unwholesome hoard before succumbing to the orange tide.”

“Th’ shriekin' stinkin' ape men was a mass of scratching nails and yellow teeth. We was brought before a throne of porcelain. Upon it swatted th’ monarch of the Magaloids. It’s tangerine hair mottled and infested with some kind of glutinous goo. Th’ ridiculous expressions on its fearsome face reminded me of th’ image of Mussolini reflected in a funhouse mirror.”

“Th’ venomous visage uttered absurdities from its preposterous puss. Th’ mangled verbiage was something like English. At first I thought it was th’ random ravings of a preposterous primitive, but slowly I reckoned that this atrocious antediluvian was an ass-hole, and a dangerous one as well. Luckily, them perversions of personhood was none too bright, They stood enamored before their tin god allowin’ us to put to use our proficiency with ancient Venusian technology.”

“Th’ three small artifacts that had been hidden in our underclothing found their way into th' pertinent niches in the base of th' throne. Suddenly th' chamber was filled with a butane blue flame. Th’ light in th’ eyes of the contemptuous conglomerate became even duller as the Z-rays changed polarity. The now simple apes wandered off to return to nature as their moronic majesty was preternaturally perplexed. Our workmen fashioned a crude cage from the local vegetation allowing us to transport th’ nocuous nobility back to civilization. We was able to turn a tidy profit selling it to the Cleveland Zoo.”

The Venus Vixen Dance Collective

Backstage at the Third Interplanetary,
Vivacious Vixenette ready for her cue.

Vivacious Vixenette (Gertrude Kromebangle) grew up in the barbarous back alleys of Reaganville. Life was cheap and brutish. Her early days were a juggernaut of melancholy. One dark day, in the depths of despair, she made her way to the corner of laVay and Crowley. On that insidious intersection stood the Armed Services Enslavement Center. So deep was her maelstrom of madness, so low was the supposition of salvation , that even that ultimate indignity seemed to be an option.

Just as she was about to enter the perverse portal of inordinate indoctrination, the opening theme of the well-loved radio drama "Make Room for Zontar" issued from a battered Zenith situated in Stammering Sammy's Shoe Shine Shack. A switch was thrown and the power of her own mind illuminated her individuality. At that moment her path was clear. The Venus Vixen Dance Collective became her deliverance.

Make Room for Zontar was a cult radio hit from the first day it was broadcast, May 1, 1933. Heard every Friday on the Delmar Network and repeated endlessly on Long Wave Interocitor channels 47.c3 and 51.x7 (both red and blue). Most people missed the subtle subtext and thought it just another sitcom with a strange premise . However, it is said that some found that it opened up undreamed new worlds for them.

The Venus Vixen Dance Collective often made guest celebrity appearances. The hit dance craze "The Zombification Tango" was premiered here as was the classic collaboration with Raymond Scott "Morning becomes Electronic" Hitman Payola praised the Holy Cash Cow that the show became.

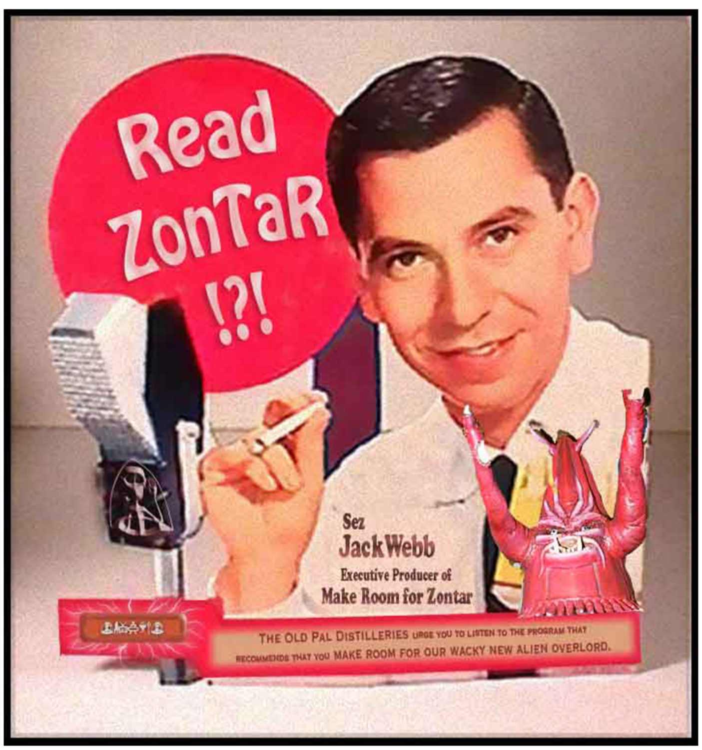

The Marvelous Maidens of Movement seemed to have all had their epiphanies within 24 hours of each other. Intellectella Sapient (nee Edweena Shrump) left her studies at MIT. Demonica Blasphemy (aka Mary O'Pattieton) narrowly escaped the nuns' cloisters. The claws of The Master soon united Vivacious Vixenette with her professional partners and personal pals.

The trio of young dancers struggled for years touring the Shinola Circuit, playing every two-bit theater from Kissimmee to Kalamazoo. Life was tough but the flame of their passion burned bright. One cold winter evening in Bridgeport, Connecticut, they were on the same bill as "Doctor" Cory Phee, the Potentate of the Vacuum Tube.

Cory was working a modified Theremin act. It was Intellectella who was first drawn to this scruffy, pale apparition in a lab coat. These two burning brains were quickly at work creating the electric contraptions that allowed them to have their first national fame as The Radio Dancers of the Night. It was the final piece of the puzzle that released the potential of their concealed Z Genes.

The now inseparable quartet went on to revolutionize the performance world. Blending breakthroughs in mechanical and electronic sound generation with a superb visual storytelling style, they thrilled theatre goers for a generation. Many fads and crazes sprung up in their wake. One of the most interesting was Interocitor Modification.

Freedman Shrump Jr was the beloved narrator on Make Room for Zontar

In 1955 Jack Webb brought his brand of Neo-Realist Surrealism to the long-running show. Based on scripts by Chester Gould several long-time characters met strange and gruesome deaths. Even with the format change the show never made the leap to Television. The last show, Friday, November 22, 1963, at 1:30 EST, was also the last broadcast for the Delmar Network. Many people agree that this was a day the world changed.

"You can't tempt me Uncle Sambozo"

The Venus Vixen Dance Collective

In its early days the Collective experimented with many styles. Few documents survived. This performance was a contribution to the Anti-Minstral Movement (or The New Abolitionists), as well as a powerful polemic against the established power structure. Deceptively simple stories and slapstick belly laughs belied the complex issues that they brought to their performances. Eleanor Roosevelt, Smedley Butler, and Paul Robeson were early supporters.

Orval Faubus personally lobbied The Akron Rubber Trust who were the major underwriter of the collective at that time. Thankfully, Cory's connections with the Rubber Barons was unbreakable and the quartet continued its rise to fame.

The Interocitor Underground

The epic adventures of advanced physicist Cal Meacham are well known. The first Earth Man to successfully construct an Interocitor left behind a legacy of lesser minds' failures. 343 uncompleted kits were the genesis of an active cottage industry in supplying the hobbyist hot rodders.

Long-wave transmitters, 3-D color visualizers, Audio Disorienters, as well as a many more imaginative gizmos and contrivances filled the home labs of the tinkerers bored with ham radios and early televisions.Aunt Keltron, The Mad Metalunan, and Alien Trade Connection provided these hobbyists with a supply of backlog and reverse-engineered parts.

The Why Indeed performance has developed a reputation as a turning point in the history of the collective.
The anti-war message hit a responsive chord in a weary working class tired of sending its best and brightest to die for an obscure jingoistic cause.
The performances were planed for most of the month of May 1952, however agent provocateurs linked to the FBI and the American Legion disrupted the tenth presentation. The proletariat backlash erupted into the infamous Akron Rubber Riots.

The Interocitor Underground

After the brouhaha of the Rubber Riots and the secret blacklisting bookings became fewer and more inconsequential. It was wisely decided that a self imposed semi-retirement was in order.
For more than 20 years the collective presented scaled back entertainments every Wednesday and Friday evenings at the Tesla Triumphant Cafe in the Central Square district of Cambridge Mass. Tuli Kupferberg, Les Paul and Jimmy Carl Black were a few of the guests that graced the small stage. The cafe, like most things of interest in greater Boston, fell victim to the curse of the hideous Neo-Yuppie gentrification that blights the area to this day.

For many millennia the valiant visages of Hap Hapless have enriched the painterly panoramas of The Lesser Zontar Islands. Little is known of the historic origin of the irreverent icon, however resent studies have revealed a complex web of interlocking perplexing puzzlements and confounding conundrums. Professor Harman Humdinger of The Zontar Institute for Intergalactic Enlightenment has postulated that the 782.431 sainted sculptures are indeed a vast "consciousness capacitor" and that the pesky and unnecessary flotsam of the Hu-Man mind that are the waste products of Zontar Zombification. such as sentience and free will. are stored for the day when sufficient psychic energy has reached the tipping point and triggers the endless rule of Zontar.
